In the Recital Room at South Hill Park

BFNHS Members: £1 VISITORS WELCOME: £3 (cash at the door)

*Originally booked for 16th March last year, this talk was a Covid 'casualty' –
now happily reinstated...*

Britain's heathlands are now of global significance for biodiversity conservation and in the last few years new information has been gained on just how they function. Professor MARTIN BIDARTONDO of Imperial College and Kew Gardens will discuss how the intimate links between fungi and plants shape our heathlands, and how our forests are changing below ground. .

The Recital Room, South Hill Park
Ringmead, Bracknell RG12 7PA
No need to book in advance
